of a Chicagoan who comes to the great metropolis and remains only one night. During this brief time he has a great many strange and amusing experiences, and arouses the curiosity of his chance acquaintances as to his identity. The scenes are thoroughly local. The first act takes place in the Hortman House, the second in a studio, and the third in the tower of the Madison Square Garden. Rehearsals will begin immediately after the arrival of Harry Connor from Australia, about January 20.

Morrison's "Faust." From many pulpits next Sunday Sa-tan will receive a body blow and six will be condemned in vigorous language, but none of the moral lessons preached by the clergy can be more powerful, and picture with more realism the orthodox hell, as does Morrison's production of "Faust," which will be seen here at the Opera House, next Saturday, January 23, matinee and evening. The pulpit orator can give a description of the abode of the damned, as he fancies it, but the Morrison company presents the entire internal arrangements of the lurid dwelling place, with its darts of fire and electric flashes, while at the same time there is given an impersonation of his satants friendship, so weirdly wicked and horrifying as to cause one to shudder with fear and abhorence, "if this be Satan I will steer my human craft to another port," are no doubt resolutions formed by many after witnessing this truly marvelous production. A large number of startling stage effects are employed which add strength to the performance. Electricity comes into play frequently and flashes of the mysterious light are almost constantly seen. A cross starting into light by the church wall danns the flend amid his bondent to startling singularity. However, and the well danns the flend amid his bondent in the Brooken scene where Margueries gives herself to her lover, but it is in the Brooken scene that the acme of "light effect" is attained; fiery dragons pass through the air, leaving a train of sparks behind and a vertiable calaract of electric fire descends at the close. A pleasant feature this searon is the fact that there is almost a running accompaniment of subdued orchestral music which includes much of Gound's "Faust" score, and other selections from works of Rossini, Meyerbeer and others. will be condemned in vigorous lan-guage, but none of the moral lessons

The Octoroons

The Octorooms.

Superb singing and rich, rare comedy captivated an audience which crowded the Grand Opera House hast night. The attraction was John W. Ishman's 'Octoorooms'. The company is even larger and better than before, although many of the old faces are still seen in the cast. The programme is one of the best ever given at the Grand, "Thirty minutes around the Operas," is the title of the finale. Scenos and airs from "Cavaliera Rusticama," "Pinafore," "Robin Hood," "Erminie," "Tar and Tartar," "Il Travatore" predominate. The entire company of singers participates and the result is one of the most pleasing entertainments imaginable. The celebrated Madam Flower, and Fred, J. Pierr appear to the best advantage and render some beautiful and difficult vocal selections. A special matinee will be given this ocalultul and difficult vocal selections. A special matinee will be given this afternoon for the benefit of the indies and children, and the "Octorons" will be seen to-night, to-morrow afternoon and to-morrow night, when the engagement will close.
